Allopathic Medical Schools That Are Not Using VirtualEvals for 2007 or Have Not Yet Committed (June 21, 2006)

The schools listed below are those that either will not be using VirtualEvals for 2007 or are still in the process of deciding. We will update this list for 2007 as it changes.

David Geffen School of Medicine at UCLA (we are working to recruit them for 2007)

University of California, San Francisco School of Medicine (we are working to recruit them for 2007)

University of Missouri–Kansas City School of Medicine (BS/MD program)

Northeastern Ohio Universities College of Medicine (primarily BS/MD program; however, since they do accept some regular applicants, we are working to recruit them for 2007)

University at Buffalo School of Medicine and Biomedical Sciences (they participated last year but have decided to take this year to evaluate their process; they have no plans at the current time to move to an electronic process)

Universidad Central del Caribe School of Medicine (we are recruiting them and would appreciate any help from schools that have a number of applicants to this school)

University of Puerto Rico School of Medicine (we are recruiting them and would appreciate any help from schools that have a number of applicants to this school)
